- Initially, there is an activation of the osteoclasts at the bone site, causing the reabsorption process, which results in the recruitment of odontoblasts that seek to repair the affected area through the accelerated production of bone. That results in a disorganized, non-lamellar structure with osteo-fibrous component.
- The osteoblastic activation correlates directly with the increase of Phosphatase-Alkaline
- Predilection for individuals of the male gender,
- Incident from the fifth decade of life. Individuals with European descent are more predisposed to the disease, and the occurrence is rare in Afro-descendants and in Asians.
