An Improved Quadrant Class II Composite Technique

An Improved Quadrant Class II Composite Technique

Category: Restorative Created: Monday, 01 May 2017 04:00 Written by David J. Clark, DDS

When a quadrant of Class II composite resin restorations shows up on our schedule, do we look forward to that work, or do we feel a small sense of dread? When I adopted the use of a dental microscope 20 years ago in my practice, most of the procedures got better, and eventually some got faster. However, until recently, I was never thrilled with either the clinical outcome or the amount of time spent on doing quadrant Class II composites. In this article, we will examine a modern approach with nonretentive saucer preparations, matrixing, and injection molding with a balance of bulk flowable and regular paste strategies. Today, the

CONTACT ELASTIC WEDGE – ZEST DENTAL

- ▶ Unique elastic wedges provide complete cervical adaption and seal.
- ▶ Hard wedges provide force at only one point and can dent matrices.
- ▶ Placement is fast and easy with rubber dam forceps or ring pliers.
- ▶ Interproximal relief feature allows stretching to a very thin profile to "floss" through tight contacts, yet rebound back fully.

Diagram illustrating the stages of post and core preparation and placement:

- before preparation
- after preparation
- device fabricated
- post and core cemented

Definition

- The post is the component of the restoration that provides retention for the core and is designed in such a way that it minimizes root fracture from functional forces
- Requisites of a post: Maximal retention within root and that of core and coronal restoration
  - Biocompatibility
  - Good aesthetics
  - High radiographic visibility

CLINICAL PREPARATION

Class V restorations are done on the gingival third of facial and lingual surfaces of all teeth.

- Initial clinical procedures:

- Anesthesia may be necessary for patient comfort and helps decrease salivary flow during the procedure.
- Occlusal evaluation not required for class V restorations.
- Composite shade must be selected before the tooth dehydrates.
- During shade selection, it must be remembered that tooth is darker and more opaque in the cervical third.

INDICATIONS:

Any aesthetic enhancement procedures where optimum isolation is possible

Non-cariou defects (abrasion, abfraction) are restored with composite resins as they restore form and esthetics

Class V cavities in esthetically important areas like the anterior region are also restored with composite resins

Composites perform best when all margins of the tooth preparation are in enamel

FINAL TOOTH PREPARATION

32

- Removal of any remaining defective enamel and infected carious dentin
- Infected carious dentin is removed with a slowly revolving round bur of appropriate size or a discoid-type spoon excavator or both.

• Infected carious dentin extending beyond ideal pulpal wall position. • Incorrect lowering of pulpal wall to include infected carious dentin. • Correct extension facially and lingually beyond infected carious dentin.

REVERSE CURVE

30

- When the direction of the mesiofacial wall is parallel to the direction of the enamel rods, thus creating a 's' shaped curve in the proximal outline.

It is created to:

- Provide butt joint in the preparation margin.
- To relieve the contact
- To place the proximal margins in a self cleansing area.
