to change course. They are extremely small pulsating currents used to relieve pain and to heal soft tissue of the body

Electrogalvanic stimulation therapy

Electrogalvanic Stimulation Therapy (EGS) uses the principle that electrical stimulation cause muscle contraction. It consists of high-voltage, low-amperage, monophasic current of varied frequency. Rhythmic electrical impulse is applied to the muscle, creating repeated involuntary contractions and relaxations. Also Intensity and frequency can be varied according to the desired effect. They help to break up myospasm, increase blood flow to muscles and leads to a reduction of pain.

Electroacupuncture:

Acupuncture therapy is done using insertion of small, solid needles made up of stainless steel into affected parts of the body in order to cure the underlying disease. It acts on antinociception action which blocks the detection of a painful or injurious stimulus by sensory neurons. Electroacupuncture (EA), are done by inserting needles by hand and then later it is connected to the device that generates electrical current that cause stimulation of the needles. It can also be produced with normal TENS machine connected to the needles with wires and crocodile clips. Frequency, intensity and pulse duration of the electric current should be monitored and altered by Therapist. Two modes of are used commonly: 1. Low-frequency (1 to 4 Hz), High-intensity Electroacupuncture and 2. High-frequency (50 to 200 Hz), Low-intensity Electroacupuncture.

Diathermy:

Diathermy means through heating. It uses a high-frequency electric current to stimulate heat
